“How can I support grieving children when I am grieving too” – Lessons from the Pandemic about Self-Care

Presented by: David Schonfeld & Thomas Demaria

As a result of the pandemic, primary and secondary losses were reported by educators and other school staff, healthcare workers and children's bereavement center/program staff and volunteers. Processing of personal loss experiences and emotions while attending to the needs of large numbers of grieving children, families, and colleagues was indeed challenging. Many support professionals avoided addressing their personal grief and neglected personal self-care in part because they believed this was needed so that they could be available for grieving children. This dedication to the needs of grieving children sadly increased their risk of developing compassion fatigue, difficulties adjusting to their own personal losses, and health difficulties. This symposium will provide participants with tools which can be used to help identify and then modify internal and contextual barriers which result in the neglect of personal wellness needs. Examples of practical self-care strategies in emotional, health and interpersonal domains will be discussed that can be shared with school professionals and colleagues in children's bereavement centers/programs. Ample time will be provided for questions and discussions so that we can all share our ideas about how to support ourselves and our colleagues during the long-term recovery from the pandemic and promote wellness.

Administrative, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Participants will be able to provide examples of self-care strategies in emotional, health and interpersonal domains
2. Participants will be able to identify and modify internal and contextual barriers which result in the neglect of personal wellness needs
3. Participants will be able to evaluate the potential risks for staff who support grieving children when personal grief and self-care are not addressed

L.Y.G.H.T.: A Trauma-Informed Intervention for Youth in Foster Care Who are Grieving

Presented by: Monique Mitchell & Juliette Martinez

As youth navigate their way through foster care, their lives are inundated with grief and loss. Many youth in foster care are left alone to cope with their grief because the child welfare system often fails to recognize or acknowledge the losses that youth experience. This presentation will discuss youth's experiences of death and non-death loss, introduce a new intervention for youth in foster care who are grieving (the L.Y.G.H.T. program), and share findings from the program's implementation with youth, ages 12-16, in the foster care system.

Research, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Discuss the importance of addressing and acknowledging loss and grief for youth in foster care
2. Describe a new peer grief support program for youth experiencing death and non-death loss in foster care
3. Assess the needs, benefits, and challenges for implementing a peer grief support program in a child welfare community

Sustaining Peer Support Volunteers: Creating Community and Enhancing Group Facilitation Experience

Presented by: Jamie Schwellenbach & Christine Linnehan

For over thirty years, The Center for Grieving Children in Portland Maine, has provided volunteer led peer support services for grieving children and families, as well as children and families experiencing life-impacting illness. Our volunteers are at the heart of the Center's services, and the model maintained since our inception continues to provide a safe space for participants to share their feelings and experiences; decrease their sense of isolation; and foster hope and resilience. In this session we will explore practical and creative ways to support and sustain our volunteer peer support facilitators, build a sense of community, and enrich group facilitator experience.

Programming and/or Activities/Techniques, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Participants will explore three key components used to support and sustain volunteer group facilitators.
2. Participants will be introduced to at least two strategies to cultivate community among volunteer peer support facilitators.
3. Participants will be able to demonstrate at least two mind-body practices for self-care and self-compassion.

Experiential Resourcing: Designing Your Own Expressive Activities for Children & Teens

Presented by: Stephanie Heitkemper & Heather LaBouy

This immersive presentation will be led by two experienced clinicians who regularly facilitate grief groups and weekend camp experiences for children age 7-17. Inspired by the suitcases we pack full for each weekend camp; our goal is to help participants build their own grief group toolkit. Participants will watch and participate in a variety of process activities, learn skills to help kids and teens stay engaged, and be able to see tools first-hand. Whether participants are just starting with grief groups or have years of experience, this presentation is an opportunity to build and grow their engagement with flexible, low cost, and creative activities. Presenters will showcase and break down developmentally appropriate interventions and techniques to engage kids in a strength based and flexible approach to grieving. From Ice Breakers to art and closing rituals, participants will explore how they can create their own memorable and engaging group experience.

Programming and/or Activities/Techniques, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Participants will learn how to adapt and create creative expression activities based off worksheet examples.
2. Participants will learn how to identify 5 key supplies that can create their camp in a box and or suitcase. While designing multiple engaging creative expression activities over the developmental span.
3. Participants will gain insight on how to support children and teens when they are displaying a necessity to protect themselves in group.

The Intersection between Homelessness and Childhood Grief

Presented by: Debra Albo-Steiger & Daniel Sheridan

This presentation will explore the connection between homelessness and childhood grief. Many children experience homelessness as the result of the death of a parent or guardian. And conversely, during homelessness, a child often experiences the loss of a loved one. Debra Albo-Steiger led the Homeless Education Program for the fourth largest school district in the nation for over nine years and will discuss how bereavement centers around the country can connect with their McKinney-Vento District Homeless Liaison. This partnership is critical in working together to identify students who are homeless and are in need of grief support. She will describe a specific group of students, Unaccompanied Homeless Youth, an extremely vulnerable population who benefit from grief support, once they are accurately identified by the school system and bereavement center. Additionally, Dr. Daniel Sheridan will share techniques to provide support through bereavement centers as well as discuss the unique challenges children and teens face when they must grieve the loss of a loved one during homelessness.

Specific Bereaved Populations, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. The participant will gain an understanding of how homelessness is often tied to death and the reasons why this occurs.
2. Each participant will learn strategies to best collaborate with their local McKinney-Vento District Homeless Liaison to provide grief support to staff and to Unaccompanied Homeless Youth.
3. Participants will leave with ideas of how to work with local Continuums of Care to train about grief sensitivity to homeless shelters and other homeless providers in their communities.

Blue Butterfly Ball – Using Awareness Events to Provide Grief Education and Support in Your Community

Presented by: Allison Mahon, Marcie Taylor & Bethany Gardner

The Drew Michael Taylor Foundation is located in a rural university town in Pennsylvania. Learn how the foundation, founded by two bereaved parents, collaborates with university and community entities to meet the needs of grieving children, teens and adults. We will demonstrate how grief theories provide the groundwork for grief awareness events that we use to provide grief education and support in our community, as well as increase attendance at our grief support programs. The main focus will be the Blue Butterfly Ball that we created in November 2018 as an alternative to the many Daddy/Daughter dances held in our area, as well as our approach to helping our families work through various holidays through this experiential session.

Outreach and Community Collaboration, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Participants will recognize William Worden's Four Tasks of Mourning, Stroebe and Schut's Dual Process Model and Klass, Silverman and Nickman's Continuing Bonds theory in the grief awareness events developed by the Drew Michael Taylor Foundation.
2. Participants will be able to apply ideas learned in the presentation to offer unique grief awareness events in their own community in order to provide a valuable resource that local counselors, therapists, schools, funeral directors and others can share in order to educate and support both griever and non-griever.
3. Participants will discuss how the events and ideas presented in this session can be used to increase grief education and support in their own community, and offer other event ideas that can be utilized by their colleagues.

Impact of Grief on Academic Performance

Presented by: Samantha Anthony

This presentation seeks to identify the correlational patterns between childhood grief and childhood academic performance. The presentation will explore the impact that grief work has on academic performance, cognitive performance and behavior performance in schools. The data is based on grief work being done in the Philadelphia, PA area and is based on data from the Pennsylvania Department of Education and data from Uplift Center For Grieving Children, in addition to other recent literature on the topic of grief and education. This presentation seeks to use both the identified data as well as interactive audience participation to present the information.

Research, Outcomes, and Measurements, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Participants will be able to identify and categorize accurately the difference between cognitive and behavioral responses to grief in school aged youth.
2. Participants will accurately identify at least 3 grief responses and predict their relationship to the trajectory of academic performance in school aged children
3. Participants will name up to 3 reliable interventions to grief related academic decline and discuss how to employ the interventions.

Writing THAT Successful Grant Proposal

Presented by: Debbie Meyer

This workshop includes information and practice in reading and evaluating proposals and reports, finding potential sources of grant support, reading and interpreting grant program guidelines, and writing a grant or research proposal.

Administrative, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Discuss the various concepts related to grant writing and administration.
2. Construct a coherent organizational narrative.
3. Assess potential funding sources.

Examining Posttraumatic Growth in Children's Peer Support Grief Groups: A Pilot Study

Presented by: Pamela Gabbay, Lynn Snyder, & Ryan P. Kilmer

This presentation describes a pilot study examining posttraumatic growth (PTG), positive change experienced as a result of the struggle with crisis or trauma, in 6 to 12 year-old grief support groups at two bereavement centers. This project grows from a partnership between grief practitioners involved in the support of grieving children and families and a university-based researcher. Although PTG has garnered considerable interest among those who work in grief, and many who work in the field of child bereavement have reported recognizing PTG in the children they serve, minimal research has examined the construct empirically. Similarly, even though many grief centers employ a peer or mutual support-focused approach, limited research has documented the effectiveness of support-based approaches in the grief context. Presenters will outline study methods and measures and discuss findings, including those related to children's reports of PTG, peer support, and other factors explored as potential correlates of PTG. Preliminary analyses indicate that the children reported moderate levels of PTG, and that their sense of hope was a prime correlate of PTG. Peer support also related significantly to children's positive future expectations. Future directions for research as well as clinical implications for the grief field will be discussed.

Research, Outcomes, and Measurements, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Describe the construct of posttraumatic growth, domains in which growth has been observed, and factors associated with growth.
2. Learn the ways in which peer support is associated with children's self-reported growth and social-emotional well-being.
3. Be able to articulate how research on posttraumatic growth in the grief context can have implications for those providing grief services and support.

Multi-tiered System of Care for Grieving Adolescents

Presented by: Jillian Blueford

It is nearly inevitable that an early adolescent (ages 10-14) will experience a death-related loss of an individual significant to them. Given the considerable amount of time early adolescents spend within the school system, a multi-tiered system of care (MTSC) is a systematic school counseling program that reflects the needs of early adolescents grieving a death-related loss. This presentation will provide insight into the unique developmental concerns and needs of grieving early adolescents and evidence-based techniques, approaches, and frameworks that schools can implement at a multi-leveled system of care.

Programming and/or Activities/Techniques, New to the field, Advanced Learner, Everyone

Learning Objectives:

1. Attendees will identify unique grief expressions and responses for early adolescents
2. Attendees will be able to comprehend the foundations of a multi-tiered system of care
3. Attendees will learn how to implement effective techniques and interventions when engaging with grieving early adolescents

Taking Awesome Care of Ourselves (T.A.C.O.): A Personalized Self-Care Plan

Presented by: Carrie Bauer

Working with grieving children is incredibly rewarding but can be challenging at times, and if professionals are not practicing proper self-care, it can lead to burnout or compassion fatigue. During this presentation, Bauer will discuss types of burnout commonly experienced by those in the grief field and how professionals can become more resilient. Using a worksheet developed by Bauer, participants will build their own T.A.C.O. self-care plan and learn about other tools to help them care for themselves.

Programming and/or Activities/Techniques, Develop a personalized T.A.C.O. self-care plan and establish an ongoing self-care routine.

Learning Objectives:

1. Identify the types of burnout that can be experienced by those working in the bereavement and end-of-life field.
2. Discuss tools helping professionals can utilize to help build vicarious resilience.
3. Develop a personalized T.A.C.O. self-care plan and establish an ongoing self-care routine.

Empowering Caregivers of Grieving Children: How To Apply Expressive Art Tools Used By Professionals

Presented by: Lauren Raney & Mickayla Bedenian

A grief-informed movement is upon us. In this current state of the world, grief education has never been more important as we all experience both death and non-death losses. In order to become more successful in approaching this unique state of grief and its effect on the children we serve, we need to consider tools that are most helpful. We know that caregivers are significant informants to their children's behaviors, and we know that children of all ages use expressive arts as a vehicle for expression, so let's start there. Have you heard this question from parents, "Does my child need to see a therapist because they are not crying or talking about their grief?" or "Is there something wrong with them"? In this experiential presentation, participants will learn about and interact with tools that empower and inform caregivers on how to respond to the varied types of grief responses and how to use expressive arts as a way to communicate with their child, provide a safe space for expression, and gain insight into their child's perspective on their loss.

Specific Bereaved Populations, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Identify benefits of Art therapy as it relates to grief and the parent-child relationship; providing a safe space to express, giving a voice to feelings and experiences that may not be able to be verbally expressed and build family coping skills together.
2. Learn ways to empower the parents and caregivers you work with so that they feel more grief-informed when responding to their child's natural and normal response to grief.
3. Learn tangible tools and developmentally appropriate art directives that grieving children and their families can do at home to aid in communication, togetherness, and grief education.

Grief Center/OPO Partnership to Enhance Grief Support for Donor Families

Presented by: Karen Scott & Nicole Kellen

This presentation will provide an example of a powerful partnership between a grief center and an Organ Procurement Organization (OPO) to enhance the ability of both organizations to provide effective grief support for donor families. The partnership allowed both organizations to focus on more fully understanding the family experience in organ donation, the complex bereavement that often results, and increased need for support due to family structure, cause of death, etc. Through the partnership, the grief center becomes an extension of the support provided by the OPO. Grief Center staff receive education about the donor procurement process and special grief needs of donor families that enhances their ability to respond to the needs of donor families. Examples will be provided regarding how to assist families in making meaning of the loss by developing a narrative that involves the gift of life and special activities to provide donor families opportunities to honor the memory of their loved ones who gave the gift of life. The partnership activities have resulted in increased numbers of donor families participating in grief center programs and the creation of a children's book specifically for children of donors, highlighting the special gift given by their loved ones.

Outreach and Community Collaboration, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Participants will be able to describe the activities of a successful partnership between a grief center and an Organ Procurement Organization to enhance services to grieving families.
2. Participants will be able to identify specific needs unique to donor families and how to utilize a narrative approach to make meaning of the loss.
3. Participants will be able to utilize strategies for creating opportunities to recognize donor families for the special gift given by their loved ones.

“That Just Sounds Depressing”: Bereaved Black Female Young Adult Perceptions of Grief Support

Presented by: Tashel Bordere & Mary Alice Varga

This interactive session provides a cultural contextual and developmental look at the lived experiences and perceptions of grief support in a Black female college student sample. Descriptive phenomenological theory and method guided the study. In-depth, one-on-one, face-to-face interviews were conducted with twenty female young adults to gather information on the participants' life world and lived experiences with loss, coping, and support expectations. Findings indicate patterns of stigma, cultural conflicts, and cultural strengths that have important implications for support and resource provision geared to meet the unique needs of this student population. Implications for researchers, educators, and practitioners will be discussed.

Specific Bereaved Populations, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Describe female young adult perceptions of grief support
2. Examine cultural contextual factors underlying Black young adult females' thoughts and intentions around grief support
3. Delineate approaches to informal and formal support for Black female young adults coping with loss

When Hearts are Stretched: Fostering Compassion Resilience Amidst a Pandemic

Presented by: Tina Barrett

For many care providers, filling your own metaphorical cup is easier said than done. The spark that draws us to our work can begin to dim when faced with daily pressures and the mounting stress among our teams. Workplace dynamics, time pressures, personal stressors, and repeated immersion in tough stories can take a toll. Then – we find ourselves a second year into a global pandemic. What anchors us during these times? What tools keep difficult conversations constructive and help us to productively manage the expressed anger and stress of others? How can we continually regenerate ourselves, interact in ever-more effective ways, and set up systems for healthy workplaces?

Too often, workplace wellness oversimplifies the complexity of systems. Together we'll explore practical strategies related to individual employees, collegial dynamics, and larger work structures – with the goal of enhancing well-being and tools to address trauma and chronic stress. May you leave feeling inspired and empowered with tools to help you, your colleagues, and your employees keep on keeping on.

Administrative, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Identify impacts of pervasive exposure to stress and trauma.
2. Differentiate between individual, interpersonal, and organizational wellness strategies.
3. Identify two tools to address chronic stress and grief amidst COVID.

Anticipatory Grief Support for Children with Parental Illness

Presented by: Meredith Cooper & Kim Fryar

Children of parents with advanced cancer have significantly elevated levels of distress and depression compared to the general population. This level of distress is even greater during the terminal phase of the disease than after the parent dies. This presentation will present a curriculum designed to support children and parents during the advanced illness phase, discuss initial research findings and the value of community/academic partnerships with multiple entities.

Programming and/or Activities/Techniques, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Participants will gain knowledge of an advanced illness curriculum for children and teens.
2. Participants will learn preliminary findings of an advanced cancer research study.
3. Participants will understand the value of community and academic partnerships.

Kinship Care and Grief: Helping grandfamilies and other kinship families bond, heal, and rebuild

Presented by: Lane Pease

When grandparents or other kin step in to raise children after a death of a parent or parents, they face unique challenges. These caregivers must transition to a new role while many times balancing their own grief. They may face isolation from peers and mourn their former roles such as "grandma" or "auntie". The children may have faced prior losses and now must deal with many secondary losses as they adjust to new caregivers and homes. Learn how to support these new families by learning their challenges, connecting them with resources, and offering activities that helps bond and heal the family. Hear honest stories from families who are on this journey about how they are coping and what has help them rebuild.

Programming and/or Activities/Techniques, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Understand the unique challenges when grandparents or kinship members step into raise children after a death.
2. Identify bonding and healing activities for grandfamilies and other kin caregivers.
3. Recognize the importance of supporting the grandparent or other caregiver through their own grief.

Write Your Heart Out: Self Expression to cope with grief, loss, trauma, & stress

Presented by: Michele Post

Writing and poetry are powerful tools for grief, loss, trauma, stress management, and healing. Do the children, teens, or adults you work with think they aren't a good writer (or do you)? Help them overcome that negative self-talk barrier. Research on free form writing shows its positive impact on healing and the immune system. In this interactive lecture/discussion, experiential, and personal reflection workshop, poetry and written activities will be taught and experienced. Program coordinators and group leaders can use activities to help families process their grief and improve coping as well as prevent stress & burnout

Learning Objectives:

1. Implement tools to identify and heal negative self-talk that interferes with writing and poetic expression.
2. Utilize journaling/writing techniques to help with grief, loss, trauma, and stress
3. Utilize poetry techniques to help with grief, loss, trauma, and stress

Aftermath of Mass Violence: Impact and Interventions for Traumatic Grief

Presented by: Ashley Jesse

As mass violence increases, so does the need for specialized trauma-focused grief services for children. Treatment and interventions for trauma caused by mass violence will be explored through case study and research to equip mental health professionals with tools to treat traumatized, bereaved youth and their families.

Specific Bereaved Populations, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Understand complicated grief and trauma associated with mass violence
2. Integrate specific interventions based on client need
3. Recognizing ongoing trauma, unprocessed grief and retraumatization

Community Collaborations: Riding the Rollercoaster

Presented by: Amanda Sahli & Lisa E. Schmitt

Community collaborations can provide a rich environment for program design and development while serving unmet needs of the community. At the same time, they can be challenging when individual agency priorities and needs intersect and potentially conflict.

In our mission to create a comprehensive network of support for families before, during, and after the death of a child, we learned to navigate the challenges of working within multiple organizations with distinct missions and identities.

Presenters will share how they prepared for and navigated the difficulties of a multi-agency collaboration and the successes and failures along the way.

Outreach and Community Collaboration, Programming and/or Activities/Techniques, Specific Bereaved Populations, Advanced Learner

Learning Objectives:

1. Recognize potential challenges of multi-organization collaborations
2. Employ appropriate techniques to work through obstacles
3. Identify key leadership roles to maintain focus on long term objectives

Supporting Preschool-Aged Children and Their Families After a Suicide Loss

Presented by: Adam Carter

Although death is considered to be universally unavoidable, many adult caregivers are still uncomfortable discussing death with preschool-aged children. A survey of 270 parents of 4–6-year-old children revealed that parents were least comfortable talking with their children about death when compared with talking about other biological topics including reproduction, life processes, aging, and illness (Nguyen & Rosengren, 2004). When the death is a suicide loss, adult caregivers are faced with the task of explaining two complicated and often abstract concepts, death and suicide, to a child who developmentally may not be able to comprehend what is being shared with them. The use of death metaphors, the discomfort of talking about suicide, and the fear of upsetting or traumatizing the child with this information may prevent an adult caregiver from sharing about the death with a child in a way in which they could understand. Adult caregivers may seek out resources from professionals who work with this age group in hopes of getting advice on how to even start this conversation. This presentation will provide participants with a developmentally appropriate way to talk with preschool-aged children about death, ways that preschool-aged children may experience grief, how to share with a child about a suicide loss, and ways that adult caregivers and family systems can support grieving preschool-aged children.

Specific Bereaved Populations,

Learning Objectives:

1. Participants will be able to explain the unique grief responses of preschool-aged children to adult caregivers.
2. Participants will be able to help adult caregivers inform the preschool-aged children in their care about a suicide death in developmentally appropriate language
3. Participants will be able to support adult caregivers in choosing developmentally appropriate grief-informed activities that support the grief journey of preschool-aged children.

Organizational Advancement: How to Grow a Children's Grief Organization in a Smart and Sustainable Way

Presented by: Lisa Aman & Debra Brook

How do you grow your organization in a smart and sustainable way? What information and tools can you use to grow your funding base, allocate scarce resources, identify and leverage partnerships and most importantly reach and support more bereaved children? Organizational Advancement: How to Grow a Children's Grief Organization in a Smart and Sustainable Way will discuss how to address the challenges of building awareness, identify and prioritize potential funding sources, and grow and empower your team.

Administrative, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Identify and evaluate an organization's potential sources of support to enable growth: board, donors, families, volunteers, partners
2. Utilize internal and external information to prioritize both programming and funding initiatives
3. Design a toolkit specific to your organization that supports growth in a smart and sustainable way

Dysfunctional Pandemic Grief? A Critical Analysis of the Pandemic Grief Scale

Presented by: Donna Schuurman

A 5-question screening tool for "dysfunctional grief due to a COVID-19 loss" was developed to "identify probable cases" of this supposed phenomenon. This presentation will explain and critique the concept, the methodology utilized to construct the tool, as well as the scale's validity and reliability.

Research, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Identify the 5-questions in the Pandemic Grief Scale (PGS) intended to screen "probable cases of dysfunctional grief during the pandemic."
2. Critique flaws in the methodology and generalizability of the PGS
3. Question language associated with grief-related constructs and people who are grieving.

Partnering With Schools to Support Grieving Students

Presented by: Lauren Schneider & Carolyn Christ

Extraordinary times call for extraordinary measures and during the pandemic OUR HOUSE had to pivot several times to meet the urgent need for grief support services in our heavily impacted community. Since 1997 we have provided school-based grief support groups in the second largest district in the nation but found ourselves needing to find new ways to do this first virtually and then when schools reopened Fall 2021 with stringent safety measures for providers coming on campus. In addition we were tasked with finding ways to support grieving school professionals and equip them to support the students on their campuses within the scope of their roles. In this workshop we will share lessons learned building relationships with school districts, designing evidence-based curricula, supporting grieving school faculty and equipping school mental health clinicians with tools to use in school based counseling sessions with grieving children.

We will also look at the needs of volunteers leaning on staff while readjusting to the demands of providing grief support services in the pandemic and beyond.

Programming and/or Activities/Techniques, Checked

Learning Objectives:

1. Identify 2 ways to build relationships with the schools in your area
2. Identify to strategies to use to support school professionals
3. Identify 4 goals when designing curricula for use in school-based programs

Filling the Well: Increasing Volunteer Retention and Longevity of Your Volunteer Program Through Personal Loss History Exploration and Self-care

Presented by: Meghan O'Mahoney

This presentation emphasizes how self-care and exploring one's personal loss history positively impacts a volunteer-driven organization servicing grieving children and families. Good self-care for volunteers increases a volunteer's ability to support those who are grieving, evidenced by retention rates and volunteer feedback. Loss history exploration allows volunteers to discover their readiness to support grieving children and works to prevent burnout. Research supports the importance of building self-care rituals for volunteers from the recruitment stage, through training and beyond as done at the Highmark Caring Place, a Center for Grieving Children, Adolescents and Their Families—a program with four facilities across Pennsylvania.

Programming and/or Activities/Techniques, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Explain the role of self-care and personal loss exploration in a volunteer-driven peer support program.
2. Identify three self-care techniques that can be implemented for volunteers supporting grieving children.
3. Apply ongoing effective self-care strategies for diverse volunteer populations that will promote longevity for volunteers.

Grief in the Juvenile Justice System

Presented by: Sydney Ford

An overwhelming amount of our juveniles in the justice system are grieving and many of their behaviors are a manifestation of that grief. This session will focus on how we can advocate for trauma-informed care for our juveniles in the justice system to help them with their grief, and what we can do to address their grief and keep them from encountering the system, again.

Outreach,

Learning Objectives:

1. How prevalent grief is in the juvenile justice system and why many of our youth manifest their grief with certain behaviors
2. Address how individuals can advocate in their local community for trauma-informed care for juveniles in the justice system
3. How we can address behaviors in juveniles early to prevent them from encountering the justice system

Enhancing the Power of Your Story through the Business Operations Lens

Presented by: Jim Santucci

Our work in the bereavement field is driven by heart and compassion and often powerfully told through the perspectives of the families and children we serve. However, being able to effectively share your story through a business operations lens will strengthen your engagement with donors and other organizational stakeholders (volunteers, employees, and community partners), leading to greater opportunities for funding and capacity building. Join us as we share practicals, perspectives and engage in small group discussions to enhance the power of your organization's story.

Administrative, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Telling the story of your financials.
2. Strengthening your grant and funding proposals
3. Balancing operations with your mission and vision.

Topo Yoga: Self-Care for Courageous Helpers

Presented by: Kiri Meyer

"You really need to make sure to care for yourself throughout this time." How many times do you find yourself saying that to those you serve? Now my question for you is, how many times do you practice what you encourage others to do? Big sigh This question is not to shame you, rather to bring light to the fact that as the courageous helper you are, you too, deserve to care for yourself.

This community of courageous helpers is always on the move, always thinking of others, and continually striving to do the best we can. Let's take a moment to give back to ourselves and renew our sense of passion and drive. Join us for an hour full of gentle reflection, compassionate movement, and the opportunity to feel connected to our purpose.

 All bodies, levels, and abilities welcome. This will be run as a beginner's experience **

Administrative, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Reflect on purpose in both personal and professional arenas of life, to encourage growth and gratitude.
2. Build a gentle yoga practice to create a mind-body connection, fostering an overall sense of well-being.
3. Integrate a few mindfulness practices into the courageous helper's routine of self-care, in an effort to help reduce burnout.

2022 Research & Evaluation Panel The View from Here: Children's Grief from Underrepresented Communities

Facilitated by: Adam Carter, Tashel Bordere, Lamya Broussard, Monique Mitchell

The 2022 Research & Evaluation Panel will focus on children's grief experiences from underrepresented populations. Drawing upon theory, research, evaluation, and practical application, the panelists will converse about the needs of children in LGBTQI, BIPOC, and foster care communities. We hope to see you there!

Learning Objectives:

1. Describe current research and theories that address loss and grief for children from underrepresented populations.
2. Examine the unique loss and grief experiences of children from underrepresented populations.
3. Justify the importance of addressing the loss and grief experiences of children from underrepresented populations.

Between Two Screens-How to Implement Effective Grief Groups both in English & Spanish in Our Schools

Presented by: Michelle Gonzalez

Have you ever wondered how you could effectively implement a successful grief group in schools? Through this presentation, you will learn tips and considerations that are critical to consider while effectively implementing a grief group in a school in both English and Spanish. Full dialogue and discourse about cultural implications and considerations; logistics and planning; and how to loop caregivers into their child's grief group process will take place.

Programming and/or Activities/Techniques, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Participants will become familiar with key components needed to effectively implement both virtual and in-person grief support group with students in school settings.
2. Participants will leave equipped with enhanced knowledge of how to facilitate a support a grief group in schools (in both English and Spanish)
3. Participants will have a clearer understanding of how to include caregivers of grieving youth in to a grief group that operates in a school

An overnight camp experience for adult caregivers of grieving children

Presented by: Barb Kamlet

Adult caregivers of grieving children can be challenged by insuring the physical and emotional wellbeing of their children in the midst of trying to find their own emotional balance. Next PAGE is an overnight camp designed specifically to provide participants with a relaxing and meaningful experience of support, education, and community building to help them meet some of their own emotional needs as well as those of the grieving children in their care.

Camps, New to the field, Advanced Learner, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. At the end of this presentation, participants will be able to identify the benefits of providing a camp specifically for adult caregivers of grieving children
2. At the conclusion of this session, participants will have specific steps to planning and implementing a grief camp for adults who are caring for grieving children
3. At the end of this presentation, participants will be prepared to implement one specific activity to help campers reflect on their experience of their death loss

Don't Forget About Us! Supporting Young Adults and College Students in Grief

Presented by: Mandi Zucker

Years ago, there was a common myth that children didn't need to be supported after a loss because we believed they weren't affected by grief. We've come a long way, and now realize the importance of supporting children after loss. But what happens when these children turn 18? Often, we ship them off to a foreign land called college with limited support networks and a lack of accessible coping tools. For grieving students, this can be a perfect storm to learn unhealthy coping tools or to spiral into mental health concerns that don't need to be there.

If only they had support. This workshop can't fix the limited resources available on college campuses, but we can talk about ways in which we can support students at college differently. How can students access support? Can we educate peers and staff to be allies to grieving students? Can we identify student leaders and others who can be supportive, and how do we train them appropriately?

This workshop will talk about strategies to reach out to college campuses and then explore goals when we work with them.

Outreach and Community Collaboration, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Identify appropriate professionals and groups on a college campus who can provide support to grieving students.
2. Identify strategies for educating students and staff to normalize and support grieving students.
3. Summarize opportunities for partnerships with institutions of higher education.

It Takes a Village: A Model for Supporting Adults Raising Bereaved Children

Presented by: Andy McNiel

After a death in the family, relationships between children and adults in the home can become strained. Each person in the family is grieving in their own way and dynamics within the family may shift. Parents and Guardians often struggle to find ways to connect with their children and to understand how to support their children when they, themselves, are grieving too. When parents/guardians are grieving, having the energy to meet all the demands of running a household is a challenge. This presentation will provide a model for offering parenting support to adults raising bereaved children. We will explore important elements of positive parent/child relationships that can be implemented into a parenting program for the primary caregiver of children participating in your bereavement support program.

, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Participants will be able to identify the elements that help support strong bonds between parents/guardians and their children.
2. Participants will be able to identify adaptive tasks within the home that families must navigate after the death of a family member.
3. Participants will learn the primary elements of a model for providing parenting support to the adults raising bereaved children.

Healing Historical Trauma and Unresolved Grief

Presented by: Meagan Rides At The Door

Many American Indian children are not aware of the concept of historical trauma. For example, children who are not exposed to or taught their tribal language do not recognize that tribal language loss is a result of historical traumatic events that occurred in the past. They may exhibit internalized shame due to not knowing their language instead of attributing it to external past events. This session will use examples such as this to be able to help others connect the past to current day experiences much more explicitly in their work to provide healing.

Learning Objectives:

1. Discuss the impacts of historical trauma among Indigenous individuals, families, and communities on current day practice
2. Present the concept of historical trauma reminders and application of a historical trauma lens
3. Demonstrate current day implications and strategies for addressing historical trauma and unresolved grief individually and organizationally

Board Member Accountability: Because The Families We Serve Deserve A Strong Organization

Presented by: Karin Douglas

Nonprofit executives and board leaders often express frustration with board member inertia - lackluster meeting participation, inconsistent fundraising engagement, and non-functioning board committees. Getting beyond the negatives requires a shift in perspective - one that acknowledges that each board member will perform when they fully understand how their unique engagement ties to the organization's ability to make significant progress toward strategic goals. This session will align board member talent/skill/network with strategic objectives, board committee work-plans, and board member recruitment. Participants will leave with templates, timelines, and path forward for board member impact.

Administrative, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. participants will learn how to develop a strategically impactful board member pipeline
2. participants will develop annual committee work-plans that reflect board member engagement in achieving strategic objectives
3. participants will understand board leadership, recruitment, and engagement through the lenses of strategy, influence, and inspiration

Exploring the development, growth, and sustainability of a successful children's bereavement camp

Presented by: Sarah DeCosta

Exploring the development, growth, and sustainability of a successful children's bereavement camp; In person, virtually, and everything in between.

This presentation will examine the development, growth, and sustainability of a successful children's bereavement camp. Essential components to be discussed include community networking, marketing, importance of volunteers, therapeutic vs traditional camp activities, follow up, assessment, and how to make these programs work in person and/or virtually based on your community needs. HopeHealth, the second oldest hospice in the country, developed Camp BraveHeart, a children's bereavement camp which has served over 100 children each year for more than a decade. This camp will be referenced in addition to empirical research. Opportunity to discuss and support fellow professionals will be provided.

Research, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Develop a foundation for an evolving children's bereavement camp
2. Explore techniques for expanding programming in person or by adding virtual options
3. Identify requirements for maintaining a camp program based on the S.M.A.R.T. stratagem (Bachman, 2013)

Expanding Online Tools: Increasing Capacity in Parents and Community to Support Grieving Children

Presented by: Nadine Gariepy-Fisk

The COVID-19 pandemic had us all redirect and reconceptualize how we provide grief counselling and supports to children, teens and families. We were forced to let go of foundational aspects of our work: the face-to-face connections and supports. Many of us reached out to families and colleagues, engaging in a thoughtful approach to creating online and remote services.

Beyond the anxiety to reinvent ourselves to meet the needs of our clients, we found opportunities. What if we could create a future that offered less barriers and more choices for families? In a world where online education, resources, and supports are acceptable and accessible, is it possible that some of our services might be better delivered in an online format?

In this presentation, we will consider two of the Children's Grief Centre new online programs: the Parent Lunch & Learn Series and the Grief in my Backpack School Resource. This expansion in our range of services aims specifically to increase capacity in parents and caregivers, school personnel, and the community and help us provide the right support, at the right time, in the right way.

Programming and/or Activities/Techniques, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Identify barriers and opportunities in service delivery approach
2. Develop a list of gaps in service offerings to be considered
3. Formulate a plan to seek client and stakeholder input

Versatility of the Childhood Bereavement Estimation Model: 2022 Results and More

Presented by: Michaeleen \(Micki\) Burns & Laura Landry

Since 2018, the Childhood Bereavement Estimation Model (CBEM) has become the gold standard for quantifying the magnitude of grief in youth. Each year, the Judi's House/JAG team in partnership with the New York Life Foundation enhances the CBEM toolkit with up-to-date results and supplementary tools that estimate bereavement based on factors such as population density (e.g., rural, urban, metro), county location, race, ethnicity, and coming in 2022, cause of death. These products are powerful resources for professionals advancing and advocating so no child is alone in grief.

This workshop demonstrates the versatility of the CBEM by:

- 1) Presenting 2022 national and state findings,
- 2) Previewing the 2022 CBEM Key Topic data release offering bereavement rates for adult and youth leading causes of death,
- 3) Showcasing existing CBEM resources, and
- 4) Providing unpublished CBEM analyses designed to capture the complexity of this time in our history where the pandemic upended our daily lives and calls to strengthen diversity, equity, and inclusion are paramount.

The presenters will unify workshop content by soliciting real-world case examples from participants and walking through the steps to accessing and applying CBEM resources to answer programming, fundraising, and evaluation dilemmas.

Research, Outcomes, and Measurements, New to the field, Advanced Learner Everyone

Learning Objectives:

1. Relay the magnitude of bereavement in the United States and in their State according to 2022 CBEM results.
2. Articulate how rates of bereavement vary based on youth race and ethnicity at the national and state level and explain how COVID-19 may impact these results.
3. Derive prevalence related questions specific to their community and utilize CBEM resources to locate data that offers answers.

Supporting Communities and Schools: Collaboration and Creativity

Presented by: Dana Minor

This informative presentation will explore creative approaches to community outreach and will provide tools to better support students and school communities who are grieving. We will discuss collaboration efforts, activities, and programming ideas, as well as presentation formats for professionals working with families after a death loss. Participants will identify strategies in providing helpful activities and educational opportunities in grief and bereavement and identify ways to create a supportive environment in their community. We will discuss how these activities can enhance your existing relationships with area school districts and community partners and create special opportunities for remembrance.

Outreach and Community Collaboration, Everyone is Welcome

Learning Objectives:

1. Participants will be able to identify helpful strategies in community outreach and supporting schools.
2. Participants will be able to identify various creative activities and program ideas.
3. Participants will be able to identify the benefits of collaboration and continued educational opportunities in schools.

Medical Examiner's & Coroner's Office: Innovative approach to supporting families following the sudden death of their child

Presented by: Kristin James

While every single child's death is tragic, the challenges for families whose child suffered a sudden or traumatic death are even greater. After a violent or unexpected death, often the only point of interaction with a support system is with the Medical Examiner/Coroner's Office. Bereaved parents and siblings are at a higher risk for complicated grief, anxiety, depression, post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), chronic disease, and even early death. And yet, these families are often overlooked, isolated and alone to navigate their grief journey. This session will share an innovative model that bridges the gap between the ME/Coroner Setting and community-based grief services. This model also acknowledges the impact of a pediatric death on the ME/Coroner's Office and First Responders and supports their wellbeing. While this model specifically addresses pediatric death, it is easily transferable to adult loss.

Learning Objectives:

1. Define the role of the ME/Coroner's Office and the most common causes of death
2. Describe the unique needs of families and barriers to support following a sudden, traumatic death
3. Identify opportunities for partnerships with specialized grief services and social supports across the continuum of care

Carrie Bauer, BSW, MS

For the past 15 years, I have worked in both hospice bereavement programs and a funeral home bereavement organization, and during this time I have seen first-hand how rewarding end-of-life and bereavement work can be, but I have also seen how it can take a toll on those providing care. During my time working in the grief field, I have learned how important it is to recognize our own burnout and how to grow from our experiences. I developed the T.A.C.O. worksheet while working at a funeral home and what first was a joke between co-workers and me, it became a useful tool that professionals can use to remind themselves to practice good self-care. I have presented on various grief issues at both the local and national level on several occasions, and some topics I have presented on include: Helping Children Learn to Cope with Grief & Trauma, The Importance of Youth & Funerals, Understanding Children and Grief, and many others. I have presented at ADEC Annual Conference, NAGC Annual Symposium, National Funeral Directors Association's Annual Convention, several colleges and universities, and various webinars.

Sydney Ford

Sydney Ford is a graduate of the University of South Carolina with a degree in Public Relations, and a graduate of the Emory University School of Law where she obtained her juris doctorate degree. She is currently a juvenile defense attorney and followed this path because of the number of grieving children involved in the juvenile justice system. Sydney's article on trauma-informed pretrial diversion programs for our grieving youth in the juvenile justice system was recently selected for publication by the Northwestern Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology Online. She has also recently testified for the South Carolina Joint Committee on Children about getting grief resources for children into South Carolina schools.

Sydney wrote and published her own children's book, "Grief Came to Visit Today," and created a nonprofit, "Hope After Grief Inc.," that provides scholarships to high school seniors who have had a parent or sibling die. Sydney lost her dad when she was 10 years and became an advocate for grieving children at age 16 when she began going into elementary schools and talking to classes about the emotions associated with grief. Since that time, she has found ways to support grieving children by fundraising for the National Alliance for Children's Grief, becoming a buddy and ambassador for Kate's Club, and meeting with Senators and the South Carolina Superintendent of Education to advocate for our grieving youth.
